French-style chicken and veg soup

Ingredients

- 2 tbsp extra virgin olive oil
- 500g chicken thigh fillets, cut in half then sliced 1cm thick
- 1 brown onion, chopped
- 2 garlic cloves, finely chopped
- 3 truss tomatoes, each cut into 6 wedges
- 1 brushed potato (350g), peeled and cut in 1.5cm dice
- 200g green beans, trimmed and cut into 1.5cm pieces
- 400g can cannellini beans, drained and rinsed (see note)
- 400g can borlotti beans, drained and rinsed (see note)
- 3 thyme sprigs
- 1 bay leaf
- 1S tsp cooking salt
- 1 litre salt-reduced vegetable stock

BASIL SAUCE

- leaves from 1 large bunch basil (about 75g or 6 lightly packed cups)
- 1 large garlic clove
- 4 tbsp extra virgin olive oil

Method

- Step 1
Heat the olive oil in a medium pot over high heat. Add the chicken pieces and cook for 4-5 minutes until they change from pink to white, with light patches of gold, but still raw inside. Scoop them out of the pot using a slotted spoon and set aside in a bowl.
- Step 2
Turn the heat down to medium-high. Add the onion and garlic and cook for 2 minutes until soft. Add the chicken back to the pot, with the remaining soup ingredients. Bring to a simmer and cook for 5 minutes until the potatoes are soft.
- Step 3
Meanwhile, make the basil sauce by blending the basil, garlic and olive oil together in a tall, narrow container using a stick blender until smooth. Set aside.
- Step 4
Ladle the soup into bowls. Stir a dollop of basil sauce into each bowl and enjoy.

Fast four-ingredient pizza with sopressa and tomato

Ingredients

- 2 large Lebanese flatbreads
- 320g jar marinated feta, reserve 2 tbsp oil
- 12 slices spicy sopressa salami, torn
- 250g vine-ripened cherry tomatoes

Method

- Step 1
Preheat the oven to 180C fan-forced (200C conventional). Place flatbreads on two large baking trays lined with baking paper.
- Step 2
Spread with marinated feta and top with sopressa and tomatoes. Sprinkle with cracked black pepper. Place in the oven and cook for 12 minutes or until golden and crisp.
- Step 3
Drizzle with reserved feta oil and serve.

Artwork by Kristina Marotzke

On display
Hanmer Springs Library, 49 Amuri Avenue
13. Nov 23 — 13. Jan 24

Showing her artwork for the first time to the Hanmer Springs community, Kristina's artwork 'To Find A Form That Accommodates The Mess' consists of drawings/etchings of different sizes.

The drawings are intended to allow for a variety of associations and are dominated by a circle as a stereometrically pure basic shape, repeated in a hint of infinity, which is based on the spatial spherical idea as an analogous form to the shape of the world or the planetary system.

The drawings refer to the work of the author Samuel Beckett, specifically his novel 'The Lost Ones'. In this novel he refers to the inability of language to convey knowledge - because language is conceptual, i.e. abstract, and therefore incapable of conveying immediacy and truthfulness. In the chain of these considerations, he tries to counteract this inherent inability of language by finding a completely new form and use for language. Therefore, he wants to achieve the resolution of all definable features of language through the reduction mechanisms that permeate all levels of his prose. As a consequence of these considerations, the only thing that remains after deducting all features is the form that is supposed to convey the content: "Form is content, content is form"

And although form and content per se form a paradoxical relationship, he knowingly attempts the impossible, again and again.

Kristina's drawings are based on this consideration. To do so, she uses the shape of the circle, which, as a perfect surrogate by virtue of its shape, reflects the dilemma of the insolvability of this conflict, because it combines a paradox in that it can be completely regular and completely varied at the same time.

There are other exhibits on display by Kristina, namely her conceptual artwork 'Line, Line, Linea' as well as her photographic work 'Caleidoscopic Landscapes'.

Pinkie Report

Term 4 Week 6.

Journalists - Amelia Saric, Rosie Abbott, Amelia Nelson, Sharnie Inglis, Charlie Bryant, Kiara Bratschi

Canterbury Show and Clash of the Colleges.

On Wednesday the Year 8s went to the Canterbury Show. The lucky four Charlie, Amelia, Amelia and Preeti got to compete in 'The Clash of the Colleges' which is a rural games competition. There were 11 schools competing in the games. Unfortunately we were late so we didn't get to do all of the activities. We had five minutes at each station, some of the activities were gumboot throwing, tree and plant identification, fencing, wool classifying, shearing handpiece set up, artificial insemination, first aid and mussel float tying together. We had a lot of fun and it was a great experience for us all. Afterwards we joined the rest of the Year 8s. We looked around to see what was at the show and went on the rides. My favourite ride was the spinning octopus that had spinning buckets that you sat in. We would like to thank Mr McBride for taking us on this great trip.

School for Young Writers Masterclass.

Last term Amelia S, Amelia N, Rosie and Waitapu went to a masterclass in Christchurch run by the School for Young Writers. They had a great day developing their writing skills and they started writing a story up to 400 words in which a character has a super sense to enter into a competition. They had to reveal the supersense rather than telling it straight out. Below are the stories written by Rosie and Amelia N. The stories written by Amelia S and Waitapu will be published in the next few weeks.

Heartbeat by Rosie.

"Look, there's the carnival!" The tingling feeling that I had when I woke up this morning came back. As I got closer to the candy floss stall, a light throbbing sound appeared in my head. I noticed that suspicious, angry men were looking at the lady selling the candy floss. She looked back at them with fear in her eyes. Being the inquisitive person I am, I decided to edge a little closer to the men by the roundabout.

"She won't have much longer," one muttered.
I gasped in shock! I had an idea about what they were talking about.
They were talking about the lady selling candy floss.

I ran over and asked "do you know those people?"
She was reluctant to speak but slowly nodded, tears streaming down her face.

"A long time ago I was a part of a gang. We stole, and killed people.

Now I am trying to make a better life for myself. They have come back to bring me back into the gang. I refused, so they force fed me poison" she whispered. "The antidote is in the strong man's pocket."

By that time she was too weak to move or speak.

I was tingling again. What if I have a sense that can determine if someone has a low heart beat? Everything is making sense now.

I'm really stressed. My heart is pounding and my body tingling again. I'm so angry I think I might explode! Something amazing happened. I used the tingling and my mind to slip the antidote out of the guy's pocket. It flew through the air and into my hand. The guy saw me and chased me. He shouted "drop the antidote!"

"NO!!" I screamed back.

I ran and jumped behind the counter and gave the antidote to the lady. By that time the police arrived and the lady was taken away in the ambulance. My family rushed round the corner.

"I think that's enough action for one day" exclaimed Dad. But as we headed over to the car I stopped in my tracks. The tingling feeling came back again. A light throbbing sound appeared in my head. Oh no! I thought to myself. Did that mean the same as before? I wondered what would happen next and who it would be.

Voices by Amelia N.

The waves crashed onto the boulders and the sand burned the soles of my feet as I reached for the rock. My hand sliced open and blood oozed onto the rock.

"Come on, are you gonna jump?" came from one of the many voices behind me. A flash crossed me with terror, a thought of one of my friends pushing me into the waves.

One of the boys stepped forward. "Jump or I'll make you" were words I heard but as I looked at his face his lips were not moving. His voice sounded exactly like the voice in my head earlier. I felt like I was going crazy but more and more voices echoed in my head as more and more people came towards me. I turned around to see my group of friends sitting on the jagged rocks.

I took a step forward looking down into the aggressive sea which must have been at least a seven metre drop. I squeezed my eyes shut as I felt two incredibly warm hands against my back forcing me into the water. I quickly turned to see them having a good laugh about it. My sliced hand stung badly as I entered the water. More laughter continued as I ran out of the water, tears filling up my eyes making my vision blurry. Another voice raced through my head, this time of a much older and wiser voice but this was more than a voice. There was a dreaded feeling inside me, is this voice trying to warn me of danger?

I tried to ignore it but it kept coming back each time getting louder. I knew that I needed to act before it was too late. My friends, my friends' voices. I climbed back onto the rock, each step getting closer to my so-called best friend. I reached for the next climbing hole, I fell back as my mind filled with another flash. The men were heading to this exact swimming hole! I screamed at my friends "we have to leave!" They gave me a judgemental look and kept on talking. I fell to the ground as someone pulled me behind a flax bush. I looked at him with a concerned look. This time the thought from a friend nearby signaled to me there was no way out. This can't be happening.

THE SUPPLY OF NEW ZEALAND HOUSES FROM A NEW ZEALAND INVESTORS' POINT OF VIEW AT THE PRESENT TIME - 1 NOVEMBER 2023

Pita Alexander

1. Let's say the key data is:

- (a) House value of say: $700,000.
- (b) House weekly rent: $600/week (there is no management company involved).
- (c) Current annual rates and insurance is: $6,850.
- (d) Current annual repairs and maintenance paid by the owner: Say $700.
- (e) The house owner has a bank term loan of $350,000 (leaving an owner's net equity of $350,000).
- (f) The interest rate at the present time is 7.15%.
- (g) There are no loan principal payments being made.
- (h) The present tenants (a married couple with no children) have entered a one year lease (with a right of renewal) with the owner with a rent review at the end of each 12 months.
- (i) It takes the tenants (who both work 40 hours/week) in both cases 45 minutes to get to work and 45 minutes to get home - they go to work in the same car.
- (j) The purpose of this article is to suggest that even without the present non-interest claim with residential rents that the business model for New Zealand residential renting is weak from an investor's perspective. The whole exercise needs an inflation rate of close to 2% in the background. Historically, this annual inflation rate has been more than 2%. The following example in point (2) is based on the present situation without the present non-interest claims - it suggests clearly that without a potential inflation increase of close to 2% the business model is not strong enough.

2. What does the financial picture look like for the owner of the property for the next 12 months:

Estimated Gross Rental Income	$31,200
Gross Rent ($600 x 52 weeks)
Less Estimated Expenses
Rates and Insurances	$6,850
Repairs and Maintenance	$700
Administration Costs	$800
Interest ($350,000 at 7.15%)	$25,025
	$33,375
Actual Cash (Loss) for the Year	($2,175)

3. A few thoughts and comments:

- (a) The owner is 50% indebted, which is not unusual.
- (b) The split of costs relative to the total costs of $33,375 is:

Rates and Insurances	20.5%
Repairs and Maintenance	2.1%
Administration 2.4% Interest	75.0%
	100.0%
- (c) Under current arrangements put in place by the present Government administration and the IRD (and on the basis that it is not a new build) then this $25,025 of interest paid would not be claimable for Income Tax purposes - this is very unfair on investors who are providing houses for New Zealand households that currently do not own a house themselves (there are around 630,000 in this group) and what's more, they are making a loss doing it - on top of that, for the last few years their house value has been going down.

- (d) Let's say within say two years that: (1) House interest rates come down to 6%.
 - (2) The house referred to earlier remains at a capital value of $700,000.
 - (3) There are no loan principal payments being made on the mortgage.
 - (4) The rent has increased by say 3% each year to $636/week.
 - (5) The rates, insurance, administration, and repairs and maintenance have all increased by, say, 5% each year - that is an overall increase of 10%.
 - (6) What does the data then look like in two years' time: Gross Rent ($636 x 52) $33,072
Less: Rates, Insurance, Administration, and Maintenance $9,185
Less: Interest ($350,000 at 6%) $21,000

Estimated Cash Profit for the Year $2,887

4. A few thoughts and comments:

- (a) A return to the owner of $2,887 ÷ $350,000 comes out at 0.82% - over any length of time this is a long way from being a business model - particularly if the non-claiming of interest paid is not reversed.
- (b) If we assume that the non-interest claim nonsense is reversed, then what would the gross rent need to be to get the return to say at least 4%:

Gross Rent ($849.70/week x 52 weeks) (Note (1))	$44,185
Less Expenses	$30,185
Net Rent	$14,000
	($14,000 ÷ $350,000 is 4%)
Note (1): A rent of this level ($44,185) would be unworkable for the short to medium term.

(c) A more likely answer is an inflation increase of say 1.5% year - based on $700,000 this would mean:

Gross Rent	$33,072
Less Expenses	$30,815
Net Rent	$ 2,887
Plus Inflation Increase ($700,000 at 1.5%)	$10,500
Complete Return	$13,387

$13,387 ÷ $350,000 is 3.82%.

(d) This inflation figure of 1.5% looks on the low side from a long term point of view.

- (e) The data makes no allowance for the possible time value cost of the owner re repairs and maintenance, administration et cetera, which could easily be $1,000-$2,000 in many cases.
- (f) The fact that any inflation increase is not taxable complicates the issue somewhat, but there is no tax deduction claims either in the same way if the house decreases in value.
- (g) Really based on present rents and related cost to get to 4% there would need to be a long-term annual inflation gain of at least 1.5%-1.75% a year - at that level the true return would get close to 4%.

- (h) Government needs to partner the New Zealand investor group as they both want to achieve the same result - that is provide houses to New Zealand people who don't have a house - providing is the first step, with ownership for some being a second step.
- (i) Without a degree or two of inflation to compensate for insufficient net rent, the supply of houses by New Zealand investors is not a very wonderful business model - even with the interest claim issue being reversed 100%. A 4% net return would be the bare minimum return in today's business environment.

Memo to incoming government: Don't forget about the environment

The Environmental Defence Society is calling on all parties to prioritise care for our country's natural environment in their coalition agreements.

"No government has a mandate to increase pollution or species extinctions in this country. But some manifesto commitments could lead to those perilous outcomes," said EDS CEO Gary Taylor.

"On freshwater management, some of the offerings reflect a lack of understanding of how the new reform process will work. Regional councils are now preparing new freshwater plans. They will give effect to national bottom-lines as well as include catchment-based time-bound targets developed with affected landowners. This process must continue at pace. Slowing down or weakening water quality limits will lead to more pollution for longer and that's not what New Zealanders expect.

In Aotearoa New Zealand there are around 4,000 native species threatened or at risk of extinction. This is deeply concerning. We finally have national direction in place aimed at protecting nature on private land. Promises to repeal or weaken the National Policy Statement on Indigenous Biodiversity are ill-considered. This area of policy needs consistent direction over time, along with commitments for pest eradication. The government could assist by developing incentives to help landowners protect and restore indigenous biodiversity and habitats.

"On climate change, National's commitment to meeting our emissions reduction targets is very welcome. But those targets need the right policy settings to get there, otherwise the promise is a chimera. Diverting funding for emissions reductions into tax cuts needs a rethink and exotic forest offsets need recalibration to prioritise gross emissions reductions. The Climate Change Commission needs continuing support and proposals to dismantle it should be rejected.

"All parties have had a swipe at the resource management system with varying degrees of radicalism. This is where some serious, deep thinking is required, or we will head into a decade or more of uncertainty. It's just silly to completely reject all the policy development that's taken place over the past 5 years and start over. Parliament needs to come to a broad consensus on the way forward. By all means, speed up decision-making, including for renewables, and fine-tune what's there, but don't throw the new laws out. The Spatial Planning Act has great potential to speed up infrastructure delivery.

"Our marine environment is one of the largest in the world. Its management needs fundamental reform. We need to shift towards ecosystem-based management for fisheries; implement more marine protected areas including around the Kermadecs; review the Quota Management System; transition away from harmful bottom trawling; and rethink the institutional arrangements for oceans management. National is well-placed to provide real leadership on this bundle of issues.

"In short, the incoming government could be very good for our environment - or very bad. All these issues need careful consideration during the coalition-building negotiations. It's not just about tax. Those agreements will set our environmental priorities for the next 3 years. We should be clever enough to provide for our economic welfare without harming our natural world," Mr Taylor concluded.
